Pick Up the Gum Wrapper Jan 07 2022 Why is it that most people start a job with high hopes but eventually become disillusioned? With mounting pressure for results, companies can't afford employees who are going through the motions. The truth is, most employees want to do their best at something they enjoy, feel valued for their contributions, and make an impact. The majority of leaders understand this, but making it happen can be a mystery. In Pick Up the Gum Wrapper, Joe Bertotto walks you through three proven steps to building a compelling workplace. With concentrated effort, these steps--assessing and leveraging each employee's unique strengths, setting clear behavioral expectations to unify the team, and applying effective leadership practices--will keep everyone's enthusiasm high by building a workplace that's positive, productive, and rewarding. Filled with examples and tools, this book shows you how to ensure that everyone is successful at work each day.

Tree Pattern Inference and Matching for Wrapper

Induction on the World Wide Web Dec 06 2021 We develop a method for learning patterns from a set of positive examples to retrieve semantic content from tree-structured data. Specifically, we focus on HTML documents on the World Wide Web, which contain a wealth of semantic information and have a useful underlying tree structure. A user provides examples of relevant data they wish to extract from a web site through a simple user interface in a web browser. To construct patterns, we use the notion of the edit distance between the subtrees represented by these examples to distill them into a more general pattern. This pattern may then be used to retrieve other instances of the selected data from the same page or other similar pages. By linking patterns and their components with semantic labels using RDF, we can create semantic "overlays" for Web information which are useful in such projects as the Semantic Web and the Haystack information management environment.

VeWra Jan 19 2023 Abstract: "Web wrappers play an important role in extracting information from distributed web sources and subsequently in the integration of heterogeneous data. Changes in the layout of web sources typically break the wrapper, leading to erroneous extraction of information [sic]. Monitoring and repairing broken wrappers is an important hurdle for data integration, since it is an expensive and painful procedure. In this paper we present VEWRA, a new approach to wrapper verification, which improves the successful family of trainable content-based methods. Compared to its predecessors, the new method aims to capture not only the syntactic patterns but the correlations that exist among them due to the underlying semantics of the extracted information. Experiments show that our method achieves excellent performance, being always better or equal than DATAPROG, the state-of-art related work."
